Crashing the city council circle

Patton Adams on the campaign trail

THE Political economy BY ED MEADOWS

Breaking up big oil

As the political winds blow hotter, there is talk in the air of breaking up the oil companies. Candidates like Fred Harris would go further and bust up all concentrated industries. Now what of all this? Is it mere populist rhetoric, designed to offer the public some convenient scapegoats in their anger over inflation?

No, there's more to it than that, much more. At issue is free enterprise itself. But not in the way you might think. For those who wish to break up corporate monopolies are perhaps the only ones who can save what we know from textbooks as free enterprise. The whole concept of free trade, of an open marketplace with price the arbiter of supply and demand, this concept is built on an assumption of "perfect competition." That is, the market system can work only if each participant is what we call a "price-taker"--one who accepts or rejects any given market price but cannot influence it himself. In economic theory, the "price-taker" can't affect a market price on his own because he's too small a unit relative to all the other buyers and sellers competing with him. And if he's not too small a unit to affect the marketplace, then he is by definition a monopolist.

Now the monopolist destroys the market system of supply and demand. He subverts the natural function of prices. If a seller knows he can affect the price of a good by his activities in the market, he's going to use that fact to his best advantage. In short, he will seek to raise the price by curtailing production of the good (given that the less he produces the higher is the price). He creates an artificial shortage. Sound familiar? We all have the distinct feeling that the oil companies and the natural gas companies (many of which are subsidiaries of the oil firms) and large food processing companies, to name a few outstanding examples, have indulged in monopoly operations. We can often do little more than suspect this, because it's quite difficult to prove in hard statistics. But this fact surely doesn't mean that significant monopoly power isn't wielded in the marketplace. Obviously it is when prices go up as demand goes down, or when oil companies shut down productive oil wells in a time of energy shortage.

But there's this idea abroad in the land, propagated by pro-business politicians and ad men, that somehow our largest corporations are institutions above reproach, patriotic to the core, interested only in our welfare. No thought that corporate men could be evil. Yet remember American history. It is rich with the scandal of dishonest, irresponsible businessmen. What of the Fisks and Goulds, the Teapot Dome scandals, and types like Gustav Swift, who built an empire selling rotten meat to Union troops? As far back as 1776, Adam Smith warned that whenever two businessmen gathered together, more likely than not they would end up hatching some conspiracy to rob the consumer.

Adam Smith's admonition is very revealing. It was he who first elucidated for the modern world how a true free market system ought to work. Smith, the father of laissez-faire economics, repeatedly warned against monopoly power. Yet those who today call themselves conservatives in the tradition of Adam Smith consider it their highest pleasure to lick the boots of every big-business magnate who lets them. And the term "free enterprise" becomes a code word to mean "let big business alone to plunder the nation by the use of monopoly power." This is precisely Ronald Reagan's (and Gov. James Edwards') concept of "free enterprise." Let the big boys have their way, and send Ralph Nader up for high treason!

Yet it is a fact of the American economy that corporate monopoly dominates the marketplace. This results from a central defect of the capitalist system. For, assuming we begin with a state of perfect competition, some firms will be more successful than others. And political power being what it is, some firms will win more favorable government treatment than others. By whatever route, as the market system becomes more developed, some firms begin to dominate others. An economist might call them more efficient, for whatever reason, than their competitors. But then a new factor enters. The largeness of a particular company, its very dominance, becomes a new efficiency in itself. The nature of its size and its cash flow allows the dominant firm to become steadily more dominant in the marketplace. It can afford to under-sell competitors until they're squeezed out. It can buy political favors to get government contracts and subsidies and can influence favorable regulation.

Then we have a perverse market system, one in which major industries are ruled by a few gigantic corporations, corporations that set completely arbitrary prices and raise them at will, corporations that extend their tentacles into the power centers of government and the mass media. Is this not a fair description of the American economy's structure today? And is it not also clear that this process is an inevitable result of maturing capitalism?

Well, there are two possible solutions. First, if we accept the emoluments of the Gerald Fords and Ronald Reagans, we will close our eyes to monopoly power and pretend it doesn't exist. (Ford even wants to help monopolies by cutting their taxes, while raising the taxes of poor people!) But others, such as Fred Harris and Birch Bayh (who above all candidates seems to grasp economics best) and Morris Udall and Henry Jackson, see a real need to break up these concentrated industries that have so distorted our economy and have so clearly played the major role in our recent inflation.

How serious, then, is the threat to break up big oil? Pretty serious. Such a proposal nearly passed in the U.S. Senate last fall, and other bills are in the wings, ready for aggressive action by liberal Senate Democrats. This is nothing new. In the 1900s, Congress broke up the coal-railroad cartels and during the Roosevelt administration it broke up public-utility holding companies and divorced banks from investment banking houses.

Most of the bills are aimed at breaking up the vertical integration of oil firms--companies that drill oil, refine it, transport it and sell it at their own service stations, setting prices among themselves along the way. Such proposals would require oil producers to get rid of their refineries, pipelines and service stations. The idea is that, if many independent refineries were out there all competing for the cheapest crude, then competitive pressure would quickly lower fuel prices. It's the old and honored idea of free enterprise at work in the marketplace.

Of course, the big oil companies, pro-business groups such as the Chamber of Commerce, and rightwing editorial writers are all shocked at the idea. They claim that this reassertion of free competition will "destroy" the free enterprise system. A contradiction if there ever was one. In fact it is designed to patch the system up, lest we one day have to resort to some ogre of a central planning board to set prices perverted by a monopoly-dominated system.

Neuffer in the back

If you can't beat 'em, join 'em. So seems to be the philosophy of Irene Neuffer, Governor Edwards' recent appointee to the S.C. Commission on the Status of Women. Only we can't help but wonder if Ms. Neuffer didn't join the Commission so that she could beat 'em from within.

Of course, Ms. Neuffer, who has become a symbol of hatred for feminists because of her opposition to the Equal Rights Amendment and other feminist causes, didn't appoint and confirm herself to the position. She had to have some help. And she got it from Jim Edwards, which was no big surprise since he is an avowed opponent of the ERA himself and he's guilty of other sexist no-nos, such as requiring all female employees in the governor's office to wear skirts so they'll look feminine. And Ms. Neuffer was also aided mightily by the South Carolina Senate, which apparently saw nothing amiss in confirming the appointment of a woman who had earlier questioned the very need for a Commission on the Status of Women. The only vocal opposition in the upper chamber to the Neuffer appointment came from Sen. Dewey Wise of Charleston, who asked that Neuffer take the Senate floor to discuss her antipathies toward the Commission. Wise's motion was, of course, denied.

There was more of an outcry from the feminist community over the Senate confirmation of Ms. Neuffer than there was over Edwards' decision to appoint her, which probably means that the feminists didn't expect much of the Governor. After the confirmation, though, the S.C. Conference on the Status of Women -- the forerunner of the Commission which was set up in 1945 -- came out publicly against the choice of Ms. Neuffer. Jean Berry, a former president of the Conference, said, "I don't think the governor could have done anything that shocked us more than this last appointment." If the Conference and other feminists were hoping that Edwards' nomination would die in the Senate, then they were severely overestimating the character of our legislature.

Neuffer, in addition to privately leading the STOP ERA movement in South Carolina the last few years, is also listed as party to a suit filed in circuit court by another Columbia woman against the Commission on the Status of Women. In that action, Theresa Day Hicks is suing the Commission to stop the state-supported agency from lobbying for the ERA. Ms. Neuffer is a party to the suit, and she said that although she hasn't taken an active part in it, she is "in sympathy" with it. However, she has promised to drop out of the suit if appointed to the Commission.

For the beleaguered Commission on the Status of Women, the Neuffer appointment is just another in a series of insults hurled at it by the General Assembly and the governor's office since it was formed in 1970. Several years ago, when the total state appropriation to the agency was $10,000 -- less than many state-employed clerks make annually -- the legislature had the gall to consider cutting that appropriation in half. Perhaps Edwards and his sympathizers in the Senate are figuring that appointing women of Ms. Neuffer's ilk to the Commission will cause infighting and destroy it effectiveness -- which it may do. Then our state leaders will have an excuse to say "I told you so" and deal the death blow to the commission that's never had a chance.

It's not just rock

Shortly after reading Osceola contributor Michael Bane's article in Rolling Stone magazine recently about a fundamentalist preacher who began a campaign to burn rock music recordings in the name of God and country, we came across another interesting news note. A wire service article told of the 50-year-old author of three musical encyclopedias who concluded that rock is not the decadent art form it is cracked up to be by some puritanical dogooders.

Irwin Stambler, author of the Encyclopedia of Popular Music, the Encyclopedia of Folk, Country and Western Music, and the Encyclopedia of Pop, Rock and Soul, said rock is not undermining the youth of today. That may come as a surprise to some stodgy parents to whom the pounding rhythms and rebellious lyrics of rock are responsible for everything from acne to impotency. Stambler commented, "Just as you can prove that rock is terrible, you can make a case to indicate that classical music is even worse."

And scientists have found that the crashing, electrified sounds of composers like Pierre Boulez have caused among their practitioners some, well, let's just say digestive trouble. Crashing the city council circle

William C. Ouzts

"As one former councilman described the electoral process, 'If you expect to get on city council, you've got to belong to the right country club and go to the right church. There's no other way.' "

by Bob Thompson

"At this point those of us who live in the city are rather in the position of a patient in a hospital with a doctors' slowdown going on. We've been probed, prodded, sampled and diagnosed, but now no one is around to do the curing."

Those are political words. They're from a speech which 32-year-old Patton Adams, a Democratic candidate for either of the two Columbia city council seats up for grabs this year, has been giving in his frenzied efforts to catch up with the incumbents. As such, the statement is meant to provoke the listener, to assure him or her that Patton Adams is not just one of "the gang," that he's the type of fresh new voice that Columbia needs. Yet there's a lot of truth in those words for, as many observers of the city political scene will tell you, Columbia's municipal leadership in the past decade has been long on planning and promises, but very deliberative (read: slow) when it comes to taking action.

Consider, for instance, one of the city's most pressing and obvious problems: the financial decay of the downtown business district. Only a couple years ago, Downunder Columbia (now officially known as Uptown Downstairs) was a promising showcase for the city's business community. Located below street level along Main Street between Lady and Washington Streets, Downunder Columbia was the kind of social center you'd be proud to take your folks to visit when they came into town. There were a number of nice, well-designed, reasonably priced restaurants and clubs, and the Downunder atmosphere was comfortable. It was a unique aspect of Columbia's social life.

Today, Downunder Columbia is showing undeniable signs of financial decay. Probably a majority of the restaurants and clubs along the underground mall have changed ownership within the past couple years. Servicemen, once barred from Downunder Columbia in an attempt to keep the clientele "respectable," now provide much of the business there. It is now a transient, boisterous clientele, the kind that (whether rightfully or not) causes many patrons to feel unsafe there. Where Downunder was once a cheery place with a unique style, now it often smells of stale beer.

To be blunt about it, downtown Columbia is not the place it used to be. Crime is becoming an increasing problem, and a number of civic leaders fear that the tax base will erode to the point where the city will be hard-pressed to pay for vital services there. To be sure, Columbia is suffering from a malady that has plagued many other cities its size or larger: the flight of residents and many business concerns to the suburbs. And it's not a problem that is easily solved. The improvements needed to revitalize the inner-city area -- police protection, better lighting, more parking, beautification -- cost money. To get the necessary revenues to revitalize urban areas, other cities have been forced to increase taxes upon residents and businesses, which has often had the unfortunate effect of accelerating the flight of monied interests out of the city. It is a classical vicious cycle.

And Columbia's city council hasn't been unaware of the problems. As attorney Adams has pointed out in a number of campaign speeches, Columbia has been studied to the point of saturation, but the fruits of those studies have yet to be realized. There's been the so-called Doxiadis Plan, which called for portion of the Main Street business area to be closed to traffic and turned into a mall. There's been a Columbia Area Transportation Study (COATS), which suggested a number of freeways be built crisscrossing the city. And there's been still another Main Street beautification plan bandied about. "Now," as Adams said, "we need someone to do the curing."

Interest in Columbia's civic affairs has been increasing, though, according to a close observer of city government. And the March 2 primary election for two city council seats is helping to heat things up. The main battle will be in the Democratic primary, for Columbia is a Democratically controlled town and the Republicans stand only an outside chance of picking up either of the pair of council seats that will be filled this fall. Incumbent Democrats William C. Ouzts, an attorney, and Jesse T. Reese Jr. will be opposed in the primary by Adams and Wiley Koon, a 54-year old real estate broker and food retailer.

According to observers, the race Tuesday to narrow the Democratic candidates down to two should be a close one. Ouzts, who's been on city council for 20 years, and Reese will be difficult to oust because they'll have the support of the tight-knit circle of city leadership. City council in the past has been one happy family, with few exceptions, and it's not easy for a newcomer to break into the social circles of city government. As one former councilman once described the electoral process, "If you expect to get on city council, you've got to belong to the right country club and go to the right church. There's no other way."

But Adams and Koon -- especially Adams -- will be formidable opponents. Koon, a former member of the city planning commission and an active participant in city politics for years, is well-respected and has name recognition in the northern part of town. But Patton Adams probably has the best chance of knocking off either Ouzts or Reese. (Reese, incidentally, suffered a heart attack recently and has been unable to attend city council meetings of late. His campaign is being managed by Jim Quackenbush Sr., a local advertising executive.)

Adams, a partner in the law firm of Graydon, Suber and Adams, has been maintaining a frenetic campaign pace recently, speaking to senior citizens groups, social clubs and civic groups. Adams' candidacy, according to one source, evolved as the result of some informal political pulse-taking by a group of young political hopefuls. Others rumored to have been considering running for council included John Lumpkin, a banker, and a pair of young lawyers, Rudy Barnes and Hyman Rubin Jr. (son of Richland County's state senator). Adams reportedly evolved as the most likely candidate of the bunch. A member of the Columbia Zoning Board of Adjustment and former secretary to the city Democratic Party, Adams enjoys a name recognition that the others don't. He's been in the news a lot because of his "maverick" stances on the Zoning Board, where he has fought hard to protect the Shandon area of the city from the intrusion of what he calls "an overnight maze of thrown-together apartment complexes." Most recently, he was on the winning end of a fight to convince the State Alcoholic Beverage Commission that it shouldn't grant a beer license to a recreation hall next to Dreher High School. As an observer described Adams, "He's objectionable to no one."

Adams has run a relatively low-key campaign -- as indeed council races perennially are. Yet he disagrees with the current four-man council on several issues. When the city police decided to form a union affiliated with the AFL-CIO, for instance, the general reaction from city government was negative. Police chief William Cauthen's terse comment on the union was, "I just don't think we need the damn thing," and city manager Gray Olive announced that the city wouldn't recognize the union. Councilman Bill Ouzts was similarly critical of the union when Osceola asked him about it. "I don't think it's necessary to have to have a union to get action from the city council," he remarked.

Adams was mildly critical of the way the city leadership handled the police union matter. "City government," he explained, "tends to deal with problems as they come up rather than anticipate them. . . .I didn't think it (a union) was necessary before. But they (police) weren't getting anywhere by any other means."

Columbia's financial matters are another source of disagreement between Adams and current city leadership. With the threat that Congress or President Ford might put an end to federal revenue sharing funds soon, the city is keeping an eye out for new ways to replace those funds. Adams contends, first, that city council has erred in the past in using revenue sharing funds for operational expenses rather than non-recurring expenses, because the city has become dependent on funds that could quickly disappear. And his suggestion on how to replace revenue sharing income (if it should become necessary) is to levy an accommodations tax of about fifty cents per night, so that visitors staying in Columbia motels and hotels would help to pay for the services they use. Adams' idea finds a cool reception, however, from some of his opponents. Ouzts said an accommodations tax wasn't feasible because the money raised would be relatively small. He suggested that the city might be allowed to levy a sales tax and/or a payroll tax instead.

Differences are to be expected, though. As one rather cynical observer said, "We're dealing with obstinate men. A man gets one big pet civic project, and if it doesn't click, he loses a lot of pride."

"They don't go down easily."

Kipling's story and Huston's art

Perhaps the most amazing thing about John Huston is that he is still around to be written about at all. For thirty-five years he's been in that most anomalous position, the artist in Hollywood, and he's stuck it out. Despite the famous rows of his later career -- the fights with Sam Spiegel over "The African Queen," the problems getting money for "The Red Badge of Courage," being kicked off "A Farewell to Arms" by David O. Selznick, the disastrous production difficulties with "The Bible" -- Huston has continued to make movies. He hasn't gone to Europe, like Welles did, or deteriorated into pointless rehashes of his earlier successes, like Hitchcock. This massive bearded man, who looks like he should have played Moses rather than Noah if "The Bible" had ever gotten around to that, is a testament to perseverance He's proof that you can survive the studios and the producers and still retain your artistic integrity.

Huston's been getting a lot of bad projects recently, but "The Man Who Would be King" shows what that survival can count for. Indeed, reports that Huston has wanted to film Kipling's story for more than twenty years are hardly surprising, since this beautiful movie looks like it's been planned for about that long. The tale itself only supplies about thirty pages of plot and there's a classic simplicity to it. Danny (Sean Connery) and Peachy (Michael Caine) are two British ex-soldiers in India who have become con men ("loafers" in Kipling's parlance) living by their wits and an unshakeable if unsentimental camaraderie. They've grown tired of the petty regulations of India's innumerable fiefdoms, and tell Kipling (Christopher Plummer) of their plan to travel across Afghanistan and the Hindu-Kush to Kafiristan, a land that no outsider has seen since the time of Alexander. Once there, they reason, they will naturally become kings ("We're not little men," they tell him) and can use their superior British soldiering to subdue the natives and loot the countryside.

> "... many must have decided that the director was all washed up, but clearly they were wrong to have ever doubted."

And so the story proceeds as directly as they tell it. After many hardships, Danny becomes a kind of god to the natives by falls when he proves his humanity by trying to take a wife. In the truly horrifying conclusion, a gnarled and broken Peachy returns to the darkened composing room of the newspaper, "Northern Star," and presents Kipling with Danny's head, encircled by its crown of gold.

Huston's style of directing all this is so simple that it might seem like no style at all, but that's part of his art. (After all, are there any simpler or more completely "worked out" movies than "The Maltese Falcon" and "The Treasure of Sierra Madre"?)
Kipling's story has a kind of Conradian romanticism to it -- the myth of the man who deserts civilization and goes off and marries a native princess--yet Huston has left out any suggestion of Conradian exoticism or the dumb-campy fairy tale quality of something like "The Wind and the Lion." Rather, he has provided deeper pleasures by treating the story as realistically as possible. Huston has many links to Hemingway (he is currently working on "Across the River and Into the Trees"), and he shows that kind of Attic directness so famous in Hemingway's prose in the honesty with which he presents his film world. For example, the natives and their mysterious land look less like figures out of Capra's "Lost Horizon" than the Mexican peasants and sun-scorched villages in Huston's own "Sierra Madre." There's an almost Flaherty-like documentary quality to the montage scenes of the villagers. Oswald Morris's beautifully muted color brings an epic scale to the images but no phony calendar art prettiness. The whole approach -- amde clear by the changing of the narrator to Kipling himself -- has been to treat the story as though it really happened.

And Huston's greatness as a stylist is even more evident in the script that he has fashioned with Gladys Hill. The dialogue has been written -- almost overwritten -- so as to match Kipling's dense prose and careful dialects. Peachy, the Welshman and narrator for most of the movie, speaks simply of the dangerous journey as "most mountainous" and avoids the usual cliches of Hollywoodese British slang. "God's holy trousers!" they exclaim when anything unusual happens. The relationship between Danny and Peachy has been expanded from the story and these two characters are hilarious in their blunt approach to what they will and will not do. They're like Tweedle Dum and Tweedle Dee, alternately speaking their mind. Plus Huston and Hill have made their friendship no more complicated than the "contrack" they have drawn up, swearing off drink and women and pledging to stand by each other until their kingship has been achieved.

Connery and Caine have taken over these roles with a relish, but they haven't overwhelmed them. Huston has said in an interview that he lets his actors do what they want. However, it's easy to see his influence in the subtlety of the acting. Caine only once indulges his penchant for disguises, and his cocky outspokenness is only natural since he really is a Welshman. Connery is even better -- avoiding that tongue-in-cheek cheekiness with which he usually wins the audience, and completely submerging himself in the character. Danny gradually merges from an almost magically likable clown --dancing on a hilltop for their caravan until it moves out of sight -- to a pathetically foolish clown (but surprisingly good king) who imagines that he really is a god. Connery has had lots of chances in the past to prove himself a star; this is one of the few roles that shows him as the great actor that he really is.

I really feel a little guilty as a critic since there is nothing -- except perhaps a somewhat excessive length -- to complain about in this movie. It is that alltime rarity, an intelligent adventure film, and comes at a time when that is just what is needed. And it's also just what has been needed from Huston. After such films as "The Mackintosh Man" and "A Walk With Love and Death," many must have decided that the director was all washed up, but clearly they were wrong to have ever doubted. It's hard to imagine Huston ever making better movie out of this material -- especially with Bogart and Gable as he originally planned -- and coming now, at the close of his career, this subject takes on a kind of symbolic irony. He is truly a princely director. His glory, unlike that of so many of his characters, has endured.

'Mayson' makes it

It's a long, hard journey from Columbia, S.C., to New York City. Especially if you make the trip via Atlanta and Los Angeles. Those were only a few stops the rock group Mayson had to make on their way to a New York recording contract.

About six years ago Morgan Hampton, an aspiring drummer living in Virginia Beach, Va., was becoming increasingly disillusioned working with a local band. Coincidentally, in another section of the beach, a guitarist named Jim Galyon was also experiencing that same displeasure with his group. The two ultimately got together and, with a few of their musician friends, formed a group of their own.

That original group broke up and came back together again many times. They were in need of a tentative goal, a sort of unifying force to keep them together. That force came in the form of Ron Herbert, a young man from Columbia who liked their sound and was able to give them the moral and financial support they needed.

Morgan feels that the group has definitely "learned a lot about the business" from their manager.

"I think he's taught us that things are done a little bit differently from what everybody thinks. It's not quite as easy as everyone thinks it is... When we went to L.A. we learned a lot out there and of course we'd never have been able to go there if it weren't for Ron."

The trip to L.A. was the culmination of an extensive tour of the south. Ron booked the group anywhere he could, just to give the band some experience. When he felt they were ready, he sent them out West to try their luck. Jim Galyon elaborates on some of their experiences:

"We were in L.A. for about a year and six months. We played all the main showcase clubs, like the Whiskey A Go Go, the Santa Monica Civic, you know, we just played most of the things where you showcase yourselves where you let the record industry out there know you're a new group. That's the whole trip out there -- you're just out there to let you name get around."

Mayson

Their name did get around to at least one prominent Hollywood personality. They were hired to play at a birthday party given by Cher for her former boyfriend, record producer David Geffen. Morgan Hampton describes the affair:

"Dylan was there and Cher was there and Ringo, Bernie Taupin, Helen Reddy and a couple of record presidents, things like that. . . It was sort of like a circus because they had us playing, and in one corner there was knife thrower and over here they had a tarot card reader and they had wrestlers at the front door. They were dressed in gladiator outfits and were actually wrestling at the front door where people would come in. It was really pretty strange."

The big break they were hoping for in Los Angeles never came, however, and Ron took his group on numerous trips to New York and Atlanta where they cut "demo" records. These records were sent to various record producers who in turn made offers to the group. Mayson was approached by several big name companies but Ron Herbert waited for the contract that he felt would mean the most to the group.

"I met a lot of big booking agents and record producers," Herbert explained. But it wasn't easy. "I'd find out where they hung out, then I'd go to the bars and places and introduce myself to these people and I'd let them know I had something they'd like and they had something I wanted. It's like when you've got something good you can't sit still, you've got to move."

Ron used similar tactics to make the acquaintance of Johnny Podell, one of the bigger booking agents who handles such top name acts as Alice Cooper, Crosby, Stills, Nash and Young, and George Harrison. Through Podell, Ron was able to get Mayson booked into the Scheafer Music Festival this past August. The group, along with B.B. King and the Atlanta Rhythm Section, played to a vast audience at Wollman's Rink in Central Park. Mayson was the first group to

ATLANTIC I THEATRE, 3220 Two Notch Road, 786-0790

A gross-out spectacular with "Abby" and "Beyond the Door," two "Exorcist" spin-offs that have lots of vomit, glowing eyeballs, etc. Rated R. Shows are continuous from 3:15.

ATLANTIC II THEATRE, 3220 Two Notch Road, 786-0790

"Teenage Sex Maids" and "The Newcomers." X. Doors now open at 1 p.m. with continuous shows from 1:15.

CAROLINA THEATRE, 1223 Main Street, 252-8011

"Permission to Kill." Obviously the emphasis, here, is on violence, but we know nothing else about it. Rated R. Call the theatre for feature times.

CINE-ART THEATRE, 1017 Washington Street, 779-3039

"French Heat" and "The Oral Generation." X, and they go from 1 o'clock.

DUTCH SQUARE NORTH THEATRE, Dutch Square Mall, 798-1110

"The Man Who Would Be King." One of the greatest of all American directors, John Huston, in fine form with this story of two ner-do-wells, Danny and Peachy (Sean Connery and Michael Caine), who leave colonial India and make themselves kings of the mysterious Kafiristan. Huston's realism gives deeper pleasures than the fairy tale fun of a "Wind and the Lion," and Connery and Caine provide two of their best performances as the unlikely pair. Christopher Plummer's not bad either as Kipling. The beautifully modulated photography is by Oswald Morris. PG. Call for the times.

DUTCH SQUARE SOUTH, Dutch Square Mall, 798-1110

"Gifts of an Eagle." Nature-adventure type flick with low-budget on location photography "filmed over many years" and narrated by Burl Ives. Judging from the trailer, that eagle is a turkey, but the trailer must be misleading. Nothing could be that terrible. Rated G. Call.

FOX THEATRE, 1607 Main Street, 254-5212

"One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest." Milos Forman's adaption of the Ken Kesey classic is a winner, and Forman's naturalistic approach to the story unquestionably far more successful, at least for the screen, than the book's comic strip context. The story is about Randle Patrick McMurphy, (Jack Nicholson) a logger in prison for statutory rape who gets himself transferred to the state asylum. He finds all the inmates under the thumb of the castrating bureaucrat, Nurse Ratched (Louise Fletcher) and the sparks fly until the tragic finish. Nicholson and Fletcher are both superb, and should both win the Oscars they've been nominated for. Rated R. Call for the times.

Ellen Burstyn and Diane Ladd in "Alice Doesn't Live Here Anymore"

GAMECOCK I THEATRE, Parkland Plaza Shopping Center, 796-0022

"Gifts of an Eagle" is on here too to exploit Burl Ives' homely TV plugs. Call.

GAMECOCK II THEATRE, Parkland Plaza Shopping Center, 796-0022

"Dog Day Afternoon." How a bank robber stuck up a Brooklyn branch on a hot August Afternoon in order to get his homosexual wife a sex-change operation. It's all true and it's crazy, but while director Sidney Lumet's eye for detail brings a superior feeling for the idyosyncratic characters, his work is still ultimately superficial. We find out no more about the characters than a bystander or someone reading about it in the tabloids. Not that that should stop anyone from going for Al Pacino's superb performance and the first rate support from Charles Durning, Chris Sarandon, and John Cazale. R. Call for times.

JEFFERSON SQUARE THEATRE, Jefferson Square Downtown, 254-6731

"Barry Lyndon." Puzzled looking Ryan O'Neal is the picaro in this story about an 18th Century Irish rake-hell who finds fortune and then tragedy by marrying beautiful Lady Lyndon (Marisa Berenson). The photography is quite stunning--quite possibly the most technically brilliant ever put into a movie and probably alone worth the price of admission, but Stanley Kubrick's peculiarly synthetic form of non-art leaves a bad aftertaste. He's put this film together out of bits and pieces of the 18th and 19th Centuries -- music, paintings, words -- and while he certainly gets his effects, he's exploited our feelings for those works rather than built upon them. The slow, ponderous style and heavy ironies seem to be at once treating Thackeray as the ultimate trip and indulging in cosmic laughter at the absurdities of past cultures. R. With Patrick Magee, Hardy Kruger, and many others. Call for the show times.

MIRACLE THEATRE, 1227 Main Street, 256-1950

"Emanuelle, The Story of a Woman." The continued adventures of that French femme fatale in search of the perfect orgasm. Probably pretty dull stuff for the true hard-core porn follower, but the original did have those classy French screen credits. Sylvia Krystel is the star. X. 2:05, 3:55, 5:45, 7:35, 9:25.

PALMETTO THEATRE, 1417 Main Street, 254-5800

"Alice Doesn't Live Here Anymore." Ellen Burstyn is the housewife who takes off on her husband's death to fulfill her ambition to be a great singer. Great she isn't, but this rare movie use of the liberation theme, scripted by Robert Getchell and directed by Martin Scorsese, does turn out to be a remarkably good time. Scorsese's kinetic cutting never stops moving, and Burstyn won the Oscar for her brilliant job as Alice. Also check out Harvey Keitel as a mildly psychotic suitor, Diane Ladd as a wonderfully crude truck-stop woman, Alfred Lutter as her unnaturally precocious kid, and Kris Kristofferson as the man who finally lets her do as she pleases. R. 3, 5, 7, and 9 with the matinees dropping Monday through Thursday. The late show on February 27th and 28th will be Woody Allen's "Everything You Always Wanted to Know About Sex (But Were Afraid to Ask)."

RICHLAND MALL I THEATRE, Richland Mall, 782-2228

"Blackbeard's Ghost." The latest Disneyana with Peter Ustinov, Dean Jones, Suzanne Pleshette, and probably some elaborate special effects. G. 1, 3, 5, 7, and 9. The afternoon shows will drop during the week.

RICHLAND MALL II THEATRE, Richland Mall, 782-2228

"The Other Side of the Mountain" stays for another week. It's about a professional skier (Marylin Hasset) and the husband (Beau Bridges) who stands by her after a tragic accident. G. 3, 5, 7, and 9 with no 3 and 5 shows Monday through Thursday. The late show here on the 27th and 28th will be "Reefer Madness."

play the annual festival who didn't have a recording contract (at that time). A contract was forthcoming, however, shortly after their performance.

Mayson signed with Bearsville Records, the company which employs Todd Rundgren and Paul Butterfield among others. The band still wasn't quite ready to record yet, though. Little more than a year ago the group had added organist Robert Schlider, and recently they replaced their bass guitarist with a young man named Sam Harrell. Now that the members have had sufficient time to polish their act, they expect to start recording in April.

The sound of their music has changed over the years. They went from a hard rock sound to a more contemporary format. But their style has remained their own, and Ron feels that a position on the "top 40" charts is about to come within grasp of the group.

"Hopefully our music will become commercial and become 'Top 40' without us having to duplicate what's going on now," Herbert explains. "When you have somethings sellable, then it's commercial and that's 'Top 40.' "

Ron wants the group's first album to be a "smash" and if that means going after the younger markets then that's what they will aim for.

"I want to hit a young audience because I found groups like Led Zeppelin, the Beatles, groups that have become very financially successful, have hit your younger markets, along with the more mature groups, and that's were I'm at."

"We want to hit it big and I think we're going to make it. We're still young. In most groups the members are about 25 to 27 before they hit, but we're still about 22 or 23."

The future of Mayson, in a sense, hinges on the success of the band's first album. But band members Morgan, Jim, Bob, and Sam are confident that their long, hard journey will not be in vain. And manager Ron Herbert is certainly not a person who gives up easily.

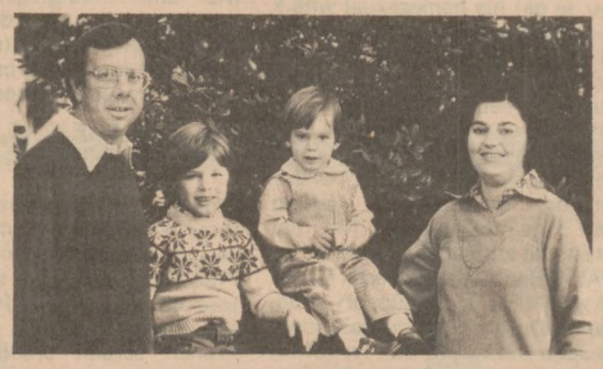
YOU AND PATTON ADAMS HAVE SOMETHING IN COMMON.

Patton Adams is a candidate for the Columbia City Council because he thinks it's time for all of us to join together to get on with the business of making Columbia the kind of city we want to have next year, in five years, and on into the future. Columbia is at an important crossroad in its development. Unless our governmental officials take the proper steps Columbia may well end up as other cities have -- a decaying urban core forsaken by both residents and business, surrounded by prospering suburbs.

Patton adams is member of the Columbia Zoning Board of Adjustment. While serving on that board he has been outspoken in his efforts to maintain a healthy balance between the business and residential partners because he knows that the future of our city depends on the harmonious growth of both.

Shandon, one of Columbia's older neighborhoods, is currently being revitalized. Patton Adams has been an active participant in that revitalization as vice president of the Shandon Neighborhood Council, a group dedicated to making that part of Columbia a comfortable and stable place to live, work and raise a family. Columbia deserves to achieve the same goal.



PATTON ADAMS TALKS ABOUT COLUMBIA:

MONEY: "We know we could do everything that needs to be done if we had all the money we needed. We don't, so we can do at least two things: (1) save money by trimming the fat out of the city budget, and (2) shift some of the city's tax obligation upon non-resident users of municipal services and upon organizations who enjoy tax exemptions without serving the public interest in return."

CRIME: "There is no reason for our law enforcement to be so inadequate that our citizens can be secure only by turning their homes into fortresses. We must maintain our strong financial commitment to law enforcement, and in turn we are entitled to innovative and successful police protection."

RECREATION: "Unfortunately we have passed that point in the development of our city where our youngsters have abundant natural areas for their recreation. Yet, we have failed to replace the old swimming hole and the open field with pools and parks. This failure must be remedied.

COMMUNICATION: "Obviously I don't have all the answers to our city's problems. Knowing that may put me in a league by myself as a candidate. If I am nominated and elected to City Council, I will be eager to have your views, your advice, and your assistance in setting our city's priorities."

Lenny

When the sun burned down
they found you balding, bare, and wrapped in a needle's knot,
Wizard of the late nights;

Bullied by the whims of body-builders
sweating wildly
in and out of jocky shorts,
Just to make It right;

Cuddled up in a nightly snack dipped from the gutters of your million dollar veins, left nothing wrong with
Lenny-when-the-sun-burned-down.

3:30 - Bowling. Finalists play in the Midas Open from (Channel 25)

4 - Sports Spectacular. Jimmy Connors plays a best of five sets match with Manuel Orantes. (Channel 19)

5 - Wide World of Sports. The Flamingo Stakes horse race from Florida will be one of the schedules events. (Channel 25)

7 - Firing line. Spain's cabinet talk to William F. Buckley about the future of their country after Franco. (Channel 35)

8 - Basketball. Georgia Southern plays Carolina from the Coliseum. (Channel 10)

8 - International Animation Festival. Tonight the program salutes the National Film Board of Canada with short cartoons by Norman McLauren and many others. Jean Marsh hosts. (Channel 35)

8 - Basketball. The Virginia Cavaliers against the Maryland Terrapins. (Channel 25)

10 - The Grammy Awards. Andy Williams will give out the annual music awards in ceremonies from the Hollywood Palladium. (Channel 19)

11 - Soundstage. Waylon Jennings, Jessi Colter, and Johnny Rodriguez will perform. (Channel 35)

11:30 - Movie. "Kings Go Forth." With Frank Sinatra, Tony Curtis, and Natalie Wood in a wartime drama, promises to be a true turkey, 1958. (Channel 10)

11:30 - Movie. "Tall in the Saddle." John Wayne in his early days as a part hero, part heavy. He plays a cowpuncher mixed up with some sordid characters. With Gabby Hayes, Ella Raines. 1944. (Channel 19)

1:30 - Movie. "Queen of Outer Space." She's Zsa Zsa Gabor and she's reigning monarch of Venus. Should cure any insomnia. 1958. (Not a banner year judging from tonight's offerings.) (Channel 10)

Sunday, February 29

12:30 p.m. - Meet the Press. Quick -- Name the Secretary of the Interior. He's Thomas Kleppe, and you can hear what he's got to say for himself during today's interview. (Channel 10)

1:30 - Movie. "Frankenstein." James Whale's classic is probably more familiar to most people from Mel Brooks loving recreation than from the movie itself. Here's your chance to revel in Whale's clever blend of camp and genuine horror. Many who saw the film as children have never gotten over it (us included). Boris Karloff is the monster and Colin Clive his remorseful creator. 1931. (Channel 19)

2 - Movie. "Alias John Preston." Creepy Christopher Lee kills people in his dreams and doesn't know if the crimes are really happening. We don't know where WIS gets these things, but it looks to be a Hammer horror opus from Britain, which usually means greasey color and extreme boredom. Made in 1955. (Channel 10)

3 - Basketball. The Golden State Warriors play the Boston Celtics. (Channel 19)

3:15 - Movie. "The Strangler." A psycopath can't help himself from murdering women. Victor Buono, David McLean. (Channel 10)

3:30 - Golf. Final round of the Tournament Players Championship from Lauderhill. (Channel 25)

7 - Movie. "The Sound of Music." The famous gob of goo makes it onto the tube for the first time. Certainly the Austrian scenery and Rogers and Hammerstein music can get their effects and it's the kind of fantasy almost anyone can lose themselves in, but you may feel a little disgusted with yourself afterwards. All that wholesomeness becomes a little grotesque, and Julie Andrews, probably the most asexual actress ever to hit the screen, was propelled into a grotesque and not too lengthy stardom by the huge box office take of the picture. In case there's anyone who hasn't seen it, it's about the singing Von Trapps who fight late thirties Nazism with love and purity. With Christopher Plummer, Eleanor Parker, Heather Menzies. (By the way, expect lots of commercials; the flick's been padded out to three hours and a half.) (Channel 25)

7 - The Adams Chronicles. Chapter 6 takes up the story of John Adams' stormy Presidency. (Channel 35)

9 - Columbo. Jack Cassidy will appear as a magician with a shady past. (Channel 10)

9 - Masterpiece Theatre. Both upstairs and downstairs the Bellamy Household welcome the New Year of 1917 and their lives continue to be dominated by the far away war. (Channel 35)

10:25 - Good Heavens. Carl Reiner has made and starred in this preview of an upcoming ABC series. It's about a guardian angel who gives people one wish and then waits around to see what happens. Brenda Vaccaro stars in this episode. (Channel 25)

Monday, March 1

8 - Movie. "The Young Pioneers." TV film about a loving young couple homesteading in the Dakota territory during the 1870's. Obviously a lot of "Little House on the Prairie" in this. Linda Purl, Roger Kern. (Channel 10)

8 - U.S.A.: People and Politics. How the body politic views abortion is this week's topic. (Channel 35)

11:30 - Wide World Special The Academy of Country Music Awards will have numbers and stars' acceptances from Hollywood. Marty Robbins is the host. (Channel 25)

11:30 - Tonight. Steve Lawrence is guest host, Steve Allen one of the guests. (Channel 10)

1 a.m. Tomorrow. Edgar Bergen talks to Tom. (Channel 10)

Tuesday, March 2

8:30 p.m. - Consumer Survival Kit. On how to keep your peepers in good working order with discussion of vision correction and the use of contact lenses. (Channel 35)

10 - Woman Alive. A look at three women who run from a farm in Iowa (Channel 35)

11:30 - The Massachusetts Primary. A summary of how it turned out. (Channel 25)

1:30 - Tomorrow. Treatments for Cancer will be discussed. (Channel 10)

Wednesday, March 3

8 p.m. - Images of Aging. "Yudie," an award winning documentary, will show an elderly woman who reflects her childhood. (Channel 35)

9 - Great Performances. Mozart's "Requiem" performed by Karl Boehm and Vienna Symphony Orchestra. (Channel 35)

10:30 - Book Beat. Bob Cromie will talk to Richard Kluger, whose book, "Simple Justice," tells of the Supreme Court rulings against school segregation. (Channel 35)

11:30 - Movie. "Massacre at Fort Holman" is a 1972 Western starring Telly Savalas, And James Coburn. (Channel 19)

Thursday, March 4

8 - The Way It Was. Sugar Ray Robinson and Jake LaMotta talk about their championship fight back in '51. (Channel 35)

9 - Movie. "McNaughton's Daughter." TV movie about the courtroom exposure of a homicidal evangelist. Susan Clark, Vera Miles. (Channel 10)

11:35 - Drama. "The Garden Party" is a TV adaptation of Katharine Mansfield's book. Maia Danzinger, Beatrice Straight. (Channel 35)

Friday, March 5

8:30 p.m. - Special. Bob Hope in a comedy whodunit with lots of cameo appearances by famous people. (Channel 10)

9 - Movie. "One of My Wives is Missing." With a title like that it's gotta be terrible, even though the cast includes Elizabeth Ashley and Jack Klugman. The plot concerns a woman who disappears and then turns up again, although her husband claims she is an imposter. James Franciscus. Made for TV. (Channel 25)

9 - Movie. "Task Force." Gary Cooper in this story of the development of the carrier navy. Pretty good, although the expectable boosterism. With Walter Brennan, Julie London, and the hopeless Jane Wyatt as Cooper's love interst. 1949. (Channel 19)

11 - Austin City Limits. "Wheatfield," a folk-country group, plays. (Channel 35)

1 a.m. - Midnight Special, Helen Reddy hosts a program with the Miracles, Frankie Avalon, The Electric Light Orchestra, Tanya Tucker and Billy Braver. (Channel 10)

CORRECTION: Last week in this column, we erroneously said that Jim's Place in Downunder Columbia would no longer be open after February. We were advised earlier this week that Jim's Place is not going out of business. Also, the musical groups listed last week to perform there were incorrect, since Jims's Place doesn't offer live entertainment.
